

Brief Economic Facts

ALLEGANY COUNTY, MARYLAND

Located at the crossroads of East and West, Allegany County is situated in the heart of Western Maryland and is equidistant from Baltimore, Washington, D.C. and Pittsburgh. With an economy that is just as highly interconnected with its neighbors in Pennsylvania and West Virginia as it is with the rest of Maryland, Allegany County leads the region in healthcare, education and advanced manufacturing. Its historic downtowns and abundance of outdoor recreation draws visitors worldwide, and innovative entrepreneurs are empowered through local programs that help to redevelop existing legacy structures into vibrant new businesses and housing options. With an emphasis on quality of life and livability, Allegany County continues to distinguish itself by embracing its past and looking towards the future.

Allegany County is home to Frostburg State University and the University of Maryland Center for Environmental Science, both University System of Maryland institutions, while Allegany College of Maryland offers degree and non-degree training programs and operates The Western Maryland Works makerspace, training the next generation of advanced manufacturing technicians. High-tech start-ups utilize the facility to prototype their next product line, and the County is in the process of developing a dedicated tech incubator, located on Main Street in Frostburg.

The county's private sector industries generate $2.1 billion in economic output.
